Orland Park Plans Worthwhile Street Improvement

It is rumored that the Orland Park Village Board, at their regular meeting on Monday of this week, took up the question of oiling the streets this year and concluded it would be quite possible for them to go ahead with such work without any cost whatsoever to the property owners. We understand the matter is to be gone into quite thoroughly during the next two weeks so a worthwhile report may be had on the entire matter for discussion at the next regular meeting on Monday, April 27. This would indeed be a great improvement for the Village and it is our hope that nothing may come about to deprive the property owners of having this passed along to them without any obligation on their part. Certain it is, those present at the last meeting feel there is no question but what it can be made a reality.

Tinley Junior Garden Club

Spring is here once more with all its attendant hopes and plans and visions of the summery future. Nature has awakened and again brings forth a flood of beauty, life and sustenance.

Spring is the season of promise, of anticipation. Blessed is the man or woman who can roam abroad at this season of the year and gaze on the swelling of the earth, the bursting of the buds, the first wild flowers.

One may behold a greater miracle in the sprouting of a seed, the joining of a graft, the blossoming of a flower, than is recorded in the writings that men believe.

Go forth then, Oh, People! Spring is here. See all you have eyes to see, woods, fields, waters, leaves, flowers and birds.

Hear the brook and birds sing and the trees rustle in the breeze.

Spring is on the countryside and all its joys are yours for the taking.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS, MEANS SPENDING MORE MONEY; MORE TAXES

To those who believe the present proposed sewer system to be a "good thing" your attention is called to several matters in danger of being overlooked and not considered. For those who have village water, of course they need only pay their assessment and the cost of bringing the sewer from the middle of the street and make connections with the basement drains. This is some expense. But this is not all for these people. Don't forget that the $20,000 sewerage disposal plant must be run and operated ever after and that it costs money to operate an expensive plant of this kind and we are asked to pay for it.

The state of Illinois when it granted the permit, will by inspections require that it be operated in a high state of efficiency or the out let to the creek into which the treating plant will drain, will be shut off.

Now this plant is not automatic, nor does it run itself. An electrician must be hired to take charge of it, a watchman hired, salaries will have to be paid, pumps are required to circulate all sewage and liquids into settling tanks, and aeration tanks and finally to the sludge bed. These pumps are operated by electric power. The electric motors, pumps and machinery wear out and have to be kept in repair and renewed. Then once a year, or oftener, all the gravel and slag must be dug out and removed from the large sludge bed and fresh gravel and cinders put in.

The sludge as it accumulates in the sludge bed from time to time must be cleaned out and removed. Chemicals and other precautions must be taken or else the accumulation of sewage will create nauseating odors and stink everyone out of the neighborhood. Then these tanks and sludge bed which are built of concrete crack due to freezing and settling and must be repaired or replaced. It has been estimated that it costs from $2,000 to $4,000 per year to operate a plant of this size. Besides this there is the general depreciation and repairs.

The Village has not the money to pay it and can only get it by increased taxation.

Do you want to have your general taxes increased to run this kind of a plant? Do you want your taxes doubled, and not for one year, but always to pay for the operation of this disposal plant? So even if you have water, you must be prepared for increased general taxes if you vote to build this sewerage disposal plant.

Now as to the people that have not got the village water. Is it fair that they pay for a sewer assessment and a water main assessment also? And in addition they must pay for making all connections and plumbing in addition. And on top of all this have the general taxes doubled. Voting for a sewer means at least two special assessments, additional expenses and doubling the village taxes.

As there is no special ballot, the only way you can vote against the sewer system is to vote for the candidates on Independent No. 2 ticket at the Mokena village election or next Tuesday, April 21, 1931. These men are pledged to vote against letting of any contracts for its construction. BE SURE AND VOTE FOR ALL 4 CANDIDATES.

Tinley Trees To Be Shipped Apr. 21

To those readers of Tinley Park who overlooked the article in last week's issue, "Honoring Washington with trees" have missed a very appropriate article, which has direct bearing upon the present tree planting project in Tinley Park as sponsored by the Lions Club. If you still have the last issue, turn to it and read the entertaining story of the origin of this nation wide planting of trees.

Tinley Park's trees will be shipped from the nurseries April 21st, so we are advised. The committee hopes for an early response from the public. Remember the committee will have to observe the rule, "First come, first served", in delivery of the trees. Kindly turn your orders in promptly and thereby co-operate with your fellow neighbors and help lighten their work.

The committee hopes to have a fitting dedicatory exercise held April 26th on possibly a week later. But first we must have all those trees planted. So please don't delay the placing of your order for the trees. Signed: Lions Club Planting Committee.

Lesson for April 19

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 16:19-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Sharing.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Sharing.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Curse of Selfishness.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Right and Wrong Uses of Wealth.

In this lesson we are afforded a look into two worlds where we see extremes of character and conditions. In this present world we see a rich man reveling in luxury and a poor man in sore affliction, begging at the rich man's gate. In the other world we see the same men with reversed positions—the erstwhile beggar enjoying the richest blessings of heaven while the former rich man suffers the torments of hell. These lives were intended to be representative. The rich man descends from the highest pinnacle of worldly enjoyment to the depths of endless misery. The poor beggar ascends from utter wretchedness and misery to the loftiest heights of blessing.

I. Contrasted Lives (vv. 19-21).

1. The rich man (v. 19).

He lived in a mansion secluded from the common people. He was clothed in costly raiment. He fed upon the richest food that could be provided. It should be borne in mind that this man is not accused of having unlawfully gained his riches. His sin was selfishly to indulge his appetites without consideration of others.

2. The beggar (vv. 20, 21).

He was laid at the rich man's gate in the hope of getting at least the crumbs from his table. No consideration was given him by the rich man, and even the dogs of the street were more kind to him. Lazarus means "God is a help," indicating that a godly life showed through his poverty.

II. Contrasted Deaths and Burials (v. 22).

1. The beggar.

He was found dead and his body hurried off to a pauper's grave. No notice was taken of it by the world, but that he was no longer to be seen at the gate of the rich man.

2. The rich man.

He also died. His gold could not bribe the messenger of death. Doubtless a costly funeral was held.

III. The Contrasted Destinies (vv. 22, 23).

1. The beggar.

He was at once carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. The souls of believers are especially cared for at the hour of death. They go immediately to be with the Lord. Destinies are determined in this life.

2. The rich man.

Though he had an elaborate burial, he lifted up his eyes in hell "being in torments." The positions of these men are now reversed—the poor man is in the company of "just men made perfect," and the rich man is stripped of his purple and fine linen and cast into hell.

IV. The Reality and Fixeness of Life Beyond the Grave (vv. 24-31).

1. The cry for mercy (v. 24).

Dives, which is the Latin name for "rich man," was now willing to claim relationship to Abraham. He is keenly conscious, and the appetites which controlled him while on earth were still with him.

2. Abraham's reply (v. 25).

This reply cast the matter back upon the man's memory. He said: "Son, remember." The lashings of a guilty conscience will be most real in hell. The one supreme thing to remember will be the cause which led to the awful destiny. Then, too, it will be remembered that the doom is just.

3. The fixeness of life beyond the grave (v. 26).

Human destiny is fixed by the choices made during the earthly life. When one passes out of this life he enters into a state and condition which is unchangeable.

4. God's Word the all-sufficient light (vv. 27-31).

Dives requested that Lazarus go on an errand of mercy to his brethren. He regarded the testimony of a spirit of more value than the Word of God. Many today are more willing to trust the rappings of a ghost than the sure Word of God. Abraham declared that God's Word is sufficient—that those who reject Moses and the prophets would not repent though visited by one who had risen from the dead. The greatest miracles will not affect the hearts of men who reject the Bible. Lost men will learn too late the value of the soul.

Search the Bible

If the people who are perpetually running about to meetings for crumbs of help and comfort, would only stay at home and search their Bibles, there would be more happiness in the church, and more blessing in the world.—F. B. Meyer.

Most Sacred Channels

I begin to suspect that the common transactions of life are the most sacred channels for the spread of the heavenly leaven.—G. MacDonald.

The KITCHEN CABINET

"Our spectacular opportunities for courage may be few or none at all. Our commonplace opportunities for courage start when we wake and last until we go to sleep. The courage of the commonplace is greater than the courage of the crisis."

WHEN ENTERTAINING

For the hostess who must prepare and serve everything, such dishes as may be prepared the day before will save her strength, good looks and enjoyment of her guests. Every hostess enjoys serving something a little out of the ordinary, and by observing the dainty things in homes and shops she may make her entertainments very much worth while. There can be nothing more gratifying to a hostess than to give pleasure to her friends.

One can do marvelous things with just a pickle. Cut into the thinnest of slices, spread in the form of a fan on a tasty sandwich it not only garnishes it but adds an appetizer as well.

Slice inch-sized pickles into very thin slices, place on open-faced sandwiches that have been spread with cream cheese. Put one slice in the center of rounds, on the tiny slice place a spot of whipped cream or cheese mixed with cream and dust with cayenne or paprika. If finger-length sandwiches are used, place the round pickle at the end and at the other end a spot the size of a quarter of finely shredded carrot.

A Man's Salad.—Prepare a half dozen hard cooked eggs by cutting into halves and removing the yolks, mash the yolks with butter, add mustard, salt and cayenne and refill the halves of egg white. Arrange on lettuce and cover with a sour cream dressing or a mayonnaise with plenty of sour cream added. If liked shredded onion may be sprinkled over the lettuce before placing the eggs.

Here is another that the men like: Take one head of lettuce, three or four green onions or a slice of Bermuda onion finely minced, three or four slices of sweet or sour pickle and one hard cooked egg. Use the lettuce in nests on the salad plate, shred the coarser part and mix with onions, pickles, and finely chopped egg. Serve with french dressing.

Cold Cream Long Popular

Don't let this jar your cold cream, girls. But, "believe it or not," that indispensable cosmetic of present-day femininity has been keeping the wrinkles from milady's face for more than 2,000 years. So says Charles Whitebread, curator of the division of medicine at the National museum in Washington. What is more, he says it is the second oldest of all pharmaceutical preparations. And you girls know who "invented" your old standby? To quote Curator Whitebread "the fragrant unguent has changed very little from the original formula for unguentum refrigerans ceratum, invented and prescribed by the Roman physician Galen, sometimes known as the 'father of pharmacy.'"—Pathfinder Magazine.

Niagara's Rival

The African waterfall which is by many said to rival Niagara, is Victoria falls, on the Zambesi river, in Central Africa. The chasm is about one-half the total width of Niagara, but more than twice its depth, varying from 256 feet at the right bank to 343 feet in the center.

Great River of Brazil

The Amazon river in the interior of Brazil is between one and two miles wide where it enters Brazil and gradually increases in breadth to 50 miles at its main mouth. Where it enters the sea the distance across the water from headland to headland is fully 150 miles.

Noted Western Character

"Poker Alice" Tubbs was a picturesque character of the old West where she was a fixture in the mining camps of the gold rush era. She was born in Devonshire, England, and came to the United States with her family. She died February 27, 1930, in Rapid City, S. D.

Source of Supply

Five-year-old Mary was driving through the country with her daddy when, for the first time in her life, she spied some cat-tails in a swamp. "Oh, Daddy," she cried, shaking his arm, "look at the hot-dog garden!"—Parent's Magazine.

"I Have Found It"

The word "Eureka" is Greek, more correctly "Heureka," meaning "I have found it." It is an exclamation of delight, appropriate when a discovery has been made. Eureka is the motto of California, in allusion to the gold discovered there.

Matter of Proportion

An alienist says insanity is decreasing. But it may only seem so because you have to be crazier nowadays to be crazy.—Racine Journal-News.

Simple Russian Moujik

Strong for Moderation

Julius Klein, the commerce expert, was talking about Russia at the Cosmos club in Washington.

"Russia is threatened with a famine," he said, "and if a famine comes good-by to Bolshevism."

"The Russian moujik is responsible for the famine danger—he won't grow enough grain any more."

"The moujik is also responsible for the revolution's success. He favored the revolution in the first place because he knew it would give him a lot of free land at his landlord's expense. The moujik's idea of justice and moderation is embodied in the anecdote about the one who said when the revolution started:

"The Bolsheviks promise to let me add a lot of free land to my farm, but I won't be a land hog. I'll only ask for what land joins mine."

Danger in Distinction

English Bishop Makes

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., said at a dinner in Blackstone: "An English bishop has come out with the assertion that he is ready to preach the eternal verities, but not to preach that the animals went into the ark two by two."

ORLAND PARK

Agreement between the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois, and the Chicago & Illinois Western railroad, relative to the construction, maintenance and operation of a 33,000 volt electric transmission line at Joliet has been approved by the Illinois Commerce Commission.

In spite of the rain, a goodly turnout was present Thursday evening April 9th when president, Hilda Cox, called the regular monthly meeting of the P. T. A. to order.

The routine business was disposed of in a hurry and the balance of the evening was devoted to a very interesting program by the pupils of the school. Violet Jacobson presented several pleasing numbers on the Hawaiian guitar as an opener. This was followed by a little play-let given by the pupils of the primary grades under the direction of Miss Eisel Ketting in which the little folks provided lots of fun and laughs for all. Leila Pomeroy, who won the township championship for District 135 school in the recent Cook County Declamatory contest, repeated her prize winning effort and Robert Beagley who won second place in the township spelling contest was introduced. Several piano numbers were played by Harold Helenhouse who displayed good understanding of his music and excellent technique.

The members were then given an opportunity to see for themselves the excellent use to which the gymnasium apparatus donated to the school by the P. T. A. was being put. Attired in attractive gymnasium suits, the girls in green and the boys in white, the pupils, of the intermediate grades under the direction of Miss Lucille Schmaderke presented an enlightening twenty minutes of demonstration of physical prowess.

It is regrettable that owing to the fact that several of the upper grade and high school boys who live in the country were unable to be present on account of the rain, that a part of the program had to be omitted.

The village board held their last bi-monthly meeting before election on Monday night. Only routine business was transacted.

Interest in the Orland Park Lions Club is increasing right along and several new membership applications have been received.

The Ladies Aid of the Christ Lutheran church will hold a bake sale at the John Loebe store, April 18th commencing 2 p. m.

Dr. W. R. Schussler is circulating a petition for the purpose of raising a fund with which to purchase road oil and having it applied on such streets in the village along which the residents contribute for this fund.

Wm. Kollman and Tom Davidson who have been spending the winter at Claremont, Florida returned last Saturday. They were disappointed with the Florida climate which was quite cold.

One of the wild white swans which made their home on the Orland lake, was recently shot.

Last Saturday two hunters were seen hunting in the forest preserve adjoining the Orland lake and a complaint was made to the game warden at Harvey who has charge of this district. When he arrived he found the hunters carried hunting licenses for three states and were shooting birds for the Field Museum, Chicago.

Davidson & Doctor have started work on a new bridge on the new stretch of 143rd st. east of here.

Rumor has it that Orland is to have another barber shop.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tonteur seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulains are returning from a visit to the Tonteurs. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Hepsibah fears for the safety of the Bulains in their isolated position. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tonteur, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tonteur home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tonteurs go to Quebec.

This discussion was the beginning of another phase in Jeems' life. It placed before him certain definite obligations of manhood which even his mother had to recognize, though she wanted to hold him as long as possible in his boyhood years. During the next year he made several trips with Hepsibah, going to Albany and as far as the country of Pennsylvania. Each time he returned to his home something held him more closely to it.

In the autumn of 1754, after four years at school, Toinette returned to Tonteur manor.

Peace and happiness lay over the Richelieu. It had been a splendid year for France along the far frontiers. Washington had surrendered at Fort Necessity, and Villiers was triumphant at Fort Duquesne. England and France were still playing at the hypocrisy of friendship. While they played, thrusting at each other secretly and in the dark, not an English flag was left waving beyond the Alleghenies. French arms and Indian diplomacy were victorious along the Ohio and westward to the plains. The policies of the British royal governors were alienating their Indian allies, and in spite of their million and a half population against eighty thousand in New France, Dinwiddie had frantically called upon England for help. In response, England was sending General Braddock.

In a double rejoicing over Toinette's homecoming and his country's success at arms, Tonteur planned a levee and barbecue at the seigneurie. Hepsibah was away at the time, which disappointed the baron, who insisted that Henri and his family must attend the celebration or he would never call them friends again.

Jeems felt a thrill growing in him as the day drew near. He was no longer the Jeems of Lussan's place as he set out in the company of his father and mother with Odd pegging along faithfully at his side. In January he would be eighteen. The alert and sinuous grace of one of the wild things of the forest was in his movements. Catherine was more than ever proud of him and rejoiced in the cleanness of his build, in his love of nature and God, and in the directness with which his eyes looked at one. But she was not more proud than Hepsibah Adams, who had seen in this pupil of his flesh and blood the qualities and courage, the lock, stock, and barrel, as he called it, of a fighting man.

Jeems was anxious to see Toinette, but with this desire there remained none of the old yearnings which had once oppressed him. She whom he was going to regard today was a stranger, one into whose presence he was determined not to force himself again. This resolution was not inspired in him by a lack of boldness or an uncertainty as to his own social fitness. An immense pride upheld him. The spirit and freedom of the forests were in his blood, and behind these was also the spirit of Hepsibah Adams. He knew that he could meet Toinette coolly and without embarrassment should they chance to stand face to face, no matter how splendid she had grown. And he realized there must be a great change in her. She was fifteen now. A young lady. At this period of his life, five years seemed a long time, and he thought it was possible he might not recognize her.

An overwhelming moment of shock seized him when at last he saw her.

It was as if a yesterday of long ago had come back into this today, as if a picture which had been burned and scattered into ash had miraculously been restored.

She was taller, of course. Perhaps she was lovelier. But she was the same Toinette. He could see no change in her except that she had become more a woman. Hepsibah's work, his own, his freedom, and his courage were dissipated like dust as he looked at her, and once more he felt himself the inferior being offering her nuts and feathers and maple sugar and praying in his childish way that she might smile on him. This was not a new Toinette removed another million miles away from him, as he had supposed she would be, but the old Toinette, commanding him to slavery again, and making his blood run hot in his body.

With a group of young ladies from the neighboring seigneurie, she had come down from the big house, and he was almost in her path, with Peter Lubeck at his side. It was Peter who advanced a step or two toward them. Except for his action Toinette would not have turned, Jeems thought. He pulled himself together and stood with his head bared, as cold and impassive in appearance as a soldier at attention, while his heart beat like a hammer. Toinette had to face him to return his companion's greeting.

It was impossible for her not to see him when she made this movement. But there was a slowness in her discovery, an effort to keep from looking at him which was more eloquent than words. It had not been her desire to speak to him.

If he needed courage, it was this enlightenment which gave it to him. He inclined his head when she met his gaze. Her face was flushed, her eyes darkly aglow, while his own cheeks bore only the color of sun and wind. He might never have known her, so unmoved did he stand as she went on her way.

She had slightly nodded, her lips had barely formed a name.

Later, after the feast on the green, came Tonteur's spectacular feature of the day, a military review of his tenants, with wives and children witnessing the martial display. The male guests, who had drilled in their own seigneuries, joined Tonteur's men. Only Henri Bulain and Jeems were not among them. Henri, sensitive to the fact, and to save Catherine from the hurt which might arise because of it, had started with her over the homeward trail half an hour before. Jeems had remained. This was his answer to Toinette's contempt—that he was not of her people, that his world was not circumscribed by the petty boundaries of the seigneurie. He stood with his long rifle in the crook of his arm, conscious that she was looking at him, and the invisible shafts from her eyes, poisoned with their disdain, stirred him with the thrill of a painful triumph. He could almost hear her calling him an English beast again. A coward. One to be distrusted and watched. He did not sense humiliation or regret, but only a final widening of what had always lain between them.

He bore this feeling home with him. It grew as time went on, and with its growth an increasing restlessness came over him. News creeping through the wilderness and reaching every corner, like the whispering winds, kept an unquenchable heat under the ash of these fires, fanning the embers into flame in spite of him. Secrets were no longer secrets. Rumors had grown into facts. Fears had become realities. England and France were still playing at peace in their mighty courts. In the sunlight they were friends, in the dark they were seeking each other's lives like common cutthroats.

And the thirteen little Colonial governments of the English, quarreling like small boys among themselves, just beginning to walk alone, feeling the significance of the new word American, cheated by their parent, laughed at by their parent, hated by their parent, still yearned for the love of that parent as children have wanted love from the beginning of time, and were loyal to it.

So tragedy began to move, to build out of death, out of betrayed confidence, out of dishonor and fraud and pitiless murder the American and Canadian nations of the future.

Eighty thousand French and more than a million English in the New world made ready for the sacrifice. Massachusetts enlisted one man out of eight of her male population. Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, New York, and the others followed her example.

Children, loyal, proud to fight—and hating the French ferociously!

Then came Braddock, preceding Wolfe, to call them "worthless trash." And New France, a glory of sun and land even now gutted of her prosperity by corruptions brought from Louis and La Pompadour, sent out her own sons to fight and kill, valiant, glad, confident—and hating the English implacably!

With them, on both sides, went Indians from almost a hundred tribes—red men who had once found honor in fighting, but who, now skulking and murderous and vengeful, found their souls in pawn to the great White Fathers across the sea who had prostituted them with whisky, bought them with guns, maddened them with hatreds, and who paid them for human hair.

Of these things Jeems was thinking as winter grew into spring and spring into summer. Only love held him from leaping to the temptations which were drawing closer about him, love for his mother whose happiness marked the beginning and the end of all action on the part of her men folk. And in this hour, when three out of four of the fighting men along the Richelieu were preparing to join Dieskau, when half of his acquaintances at the Tonteur seigneurie had already gone to fight Braddock, when the forests trembled at the stealthy tread of painted savages, and when the Frenchman who did not rise to his country's call was no longer a Frenchman, Jeems observed that the strain upon his father was more difficult to bear than his own. For Henri, in spite of his worship of Catherine, was of New France to the bottom of his soul, and now that other men were making a bulwark of their bodies against her enemies, his own desire to make the same sacrifice was almost beyond the power of his strong will to control. In their years of comradeship, Jeems and his father had never come so near to each other as in these weeks of tension.

Almost as painful to them as the sting of a wound was the day when Dieskau came up the Richelieu with a host of three thousand five hundred men and made forever a hallowed ground of the Tonteur seigneurie by camping there overnight.

When she knew they were coming, Catherine had said:

"If your hearts tell you it is right, go with them!"

But they remained. For Henri it was a struggle greater than Dieskau fought, greater than that in which Braddock died. For Jeems it was less a torment and more the mysterious madness of youth to tramp to the clash of arms. For Catherine it was the gehenna of her life, a siege of darkness and uncertainty in her soul which gave way suddenly before news which swept like a whirlwind over the land.

God had been with New France! Braddock and his English invaders were destroyed!

No triumph of French arms in the New world had been so complete, and Dieskau, the great German baron who was fighting for France, moved southward to crush Sir William Johnson and his Colonials and Indians, planning not to stop until he had driven them to the doors of Albany.

With him were six hundred and eighty-four of the loyal men who were beginning to call themselves Canadians.

Tonteur rode over to bring the news to Henri Bulain. To Catherine he recalled his prediction that the English would never get into this paradise of theirs. Now the whole thing was settled for many years to come, for Dieskau would sweep their last enemy from the Champlain country as completely as a new broom swept her home. He had sent almost every man he had to the scene of fighting, and only his wooden leg had kept him from joining Dieskau.

Even Toinette had wanted to go! (TO BE CONTINUED.)

High Place Accorded Majestic Douglas Fir

A Scottish naturalist, roving the wild western land of the infant republic 103 years ago, brought the majestic Douglas fir to the knowledge of the scientific world, and for all time it will bear his name. Of David Douglas it is said that he "contributed probably more than any other one man to the knowledge of our northwestern trees and plants."

Returning home, he introduced the Douglas fir into cultivation in Great Britain, and the Scots value it highly for finish and furniture. Now comes the sequel, in this editorial paragraph from the Seattle Times:

"A shipment of a cargo of Seattle-made furniture to Scotland has more than ordinary significance. The articles are all made of Washington fir, a wood held in higher esteem in Scotland than walnut. The purchasers specified that the wood should be in its natural grain, which everybody knows is beautiful. We are familiar with the cargoes usually exported from this state, but when a new line and new market are involved there is good reason to rejoice."

America's Largest Island

Isle Royale, Michigan's beautiful island in Lake Superior, often is spoken of as "the second largest island in the United States" Long Island, N. Y., being the largest island. But the second largest is Whidby Island, belonging to the state of Washington, according to the American Geographical society. Whidby Island lies across the entrance to Puget sound and is so little known that geographies and atlases differ on the spelling of its name.

Gold Mixture

Green gold consists of gold, silver and cadmium, and sometimes copper is also added. The degree of the green color depends upon the percentage of the metals used with the gold.

EYELET EMBROIDERY MAKES PRETTY FASHIONS PRETTIER

EYELET embroidery is doing a lot toward making pretty spring and summer fashions prettier. One cannot go far along the highways and byways of the present mode without encountering eyelet effects in some form or another.

Even our kid shoes are being designfully perforated this season. Our gloves, too, if you please, indulge in fanciful cutout effects. The fad even extends to pocketbooks and belts, not forgetting to mention some of our most flattering chapeaux which are eyeleted in decorative ways.

Never such dainty blouses made of sheerest eyelet-embroidered batiste as size flowers. Sometimes as many as twelve colors appear in the same print. It is needless to say that these gorgeous prints carry a message distinctly apart from the newest daytime effects which make a feature of monotone motifs printed in striking contrast against their background, favorite alliances being navy with gray or with white, also brown with eggshell. In the chic daytime prints red with white is also an outstanding combination while the inevitable black-and-white theme is as popular as ever.

For gala nights beneath a silvery moon, the Patou dress of printed chiffon pictured emphasizes the beguiling are being worn at this very moment with milady's spring jacket-suit. These are made either to tuck in or wear over the skirt and the newest item on the boards is the long tunic of handsome eyelet-embroidered fabric.

Sometimes it's the entire frock which is eyelet-worked, which is especially true of some of the loveliest gowns designed for afternoon and evening wear.

Then again a compromise is made in that the afternoon frock is trimmed with the eyelet embroidery in ways as charming as the picture sets forth. This adorable dress is of black chiffon, with a band of sheer pale pink eyelet-embroidered batiste outlining the sleeves and the blouse hemline. The eyeleted feature is further played up in that the top part of the sleeves is of black eyelet-embroidered chiffon.

The hat which tops this lovely two-piece dress is a stunning black bakou. It exploits the new bandeau idea expressed in this instance in terms of just enough of pink velvet ribbon to give it a note of color.

Gorgeous Printed Chiffons.

To select the right print for the right occasion is one of the problems which confronts the woman of fashion grace of flowery sheer weaves such as give colorful accent to the evening mode. The skirt is animated by panels of the fabric draped spirally, ending at one side in a short train. The scarf collar develops a cape effect at the back.

However, one chiffon doesn't make a summer, not by any means, with so many romantic events coming on which demand of fashion's fair followers that they look their loveliest. There are some spring months to be considered, too, before summer arrives, during which there's nothing so apropos for dressup occasions as feminine, fluttery chiffon.

It adds to the lure of these "five o'clock" dresses of printed chiffon, several of which belong in every well-appointed wardrobe, that they are so today. Which is not so difficult a task after all, seeing that this season's prints are so definitely typed to environment. That is, the distinction between sprightly and practical prints for active daytime wear and exotic prints whose mission it is to lend a glamorous beauty to festive nights and formal afternoons, is apparent at a glance.

In the latter class Paris couturiers are featuring among other lovely types, chiffons printed with cabbageadorably styled with all sorts of frilly feminine touches. Such intriguing details as short puff sleeves, capelets galore and flounces, peplums and such contrive to achieve beguiling silhouettes. A very special touch of artistry is the presence of a bit of velvet ribbon somewhere about, perhaps tied simply around the high waistline or a smattering of little bows nestled here and there.

John J. Pershing

The secretary of war, much to the disappointment of Colonel Roosevelt, wisely made an adverse decision in his case, which was confirmed by the President. It was evident that both Mr. Wilson and Secretary Baker were looking for trained leaders and were determined to avoid the embarrassment President Lincoln experienced in the Civil war, when he was more or less driven to fill many high positions with political appointees who, in the end, had to be replaced by men trained in the military profession.

Roosevelt's Plea for Sons.

The following letter from Colonel Roosevelt, dated May 17, 1917, will show his own fine attitude:

"My Dear General Pershing:

"I very heartily congratulate you, and especially the people of the United States, upon your selection to lead the expeditionary force to the front. When I was endeavoring to persuade the secretary of war to permit me to raise a division or two of volunteers, I stated that if you, or some men like you, were to command the expeditionary force I could raise the divisions without trouble.

"I write you now to request that my two sons, Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., aged twenty-seven, and Archibald B. Roosevelt, aged twenty-three, both of Harvard, be allowed to enlist as privates with you, to go over with the first troops. The former is a major and the latter a captain in the officers' reserve corps. They are at Plattsburg for their third summer.

"My own belief is that competent men of their standing and rank can gain very little from a third summer at Plattsburg and that they should be utilized as officers, even if only as second lieutenants. But they are keenly desirous to see service; and if they serve under you at the front, and are not killed, they will be far better able to instruct the draft army next fall or next winter, or whenever they are sent home, than they will be after spending the summer at Plattsburg.

"The President has announced that only regular officers are to go with you, and if this is to be the invariable rule then I apply on behalf of my two sons that they may serve under you as enlisted men, to go to the front with the first troops sent over.

"Trusting to hear that this request has been granted, I am, with great respect,

"Very sincerely yours,

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

"P. S.—If I were physically fit, instead of old and heavy and stiff, I should myself ask to go under you in any capacity down to and including a sergeant; but at my age, and condition, I suppose that I could not do work you would consider worth while in the fighting line (my only line) in a lower grade than brigade commander."

CHAPTER III

Our deplorable situation as to munitions was fully discussed at a conference called by Secretary of War Baker May 10. It was brought out that we had for issue, not in the hands of troops, fewer than 285,000 Springfield rifles, caliber .30; only a few more than 400 light field guns, three-inch, and 150 heavy field guns.

As it was impossible because of manufacturing difficulties for our factories to turn out enough Springfield rifles within a reasonable time, the secretary decided to adopt the Enfield rifle for our infantry. It was then being manufactured for the British in large quantities at private factories in our country, and a slight modification of the chamber only was necessary to make it fit our ammunition. The total production of this rifle exceeded 2,000,000 during the war.

As to machine guns, it was reported to the conference that we had a few less than 1,500, and these were of four types. Congress in 1916 had appropriated $12,000,000 for machine guns, but the War department had not decided definitely to adopt any particular one for our army, although an order had been placed late in 1916 for a quantity of the heavy Vickers-Maxims.

Short on Ammunition.

Of artillery ammunition, except for the three-inch, we did not have enough to provide more than nine hours' supply, even for the limited number of guns on hand, firing at the rate ordinarily used in laying down barrage for an infantry attack.

The situation at that time as to aviation was such that every American ought to feel deeply chagrined to hear it mentioned. Of 65 officers and about 1,000 men in the air service section of the signal corps there were 35 officers who could fly.

With the exception of five or six officers, none of them could have met the requirements of modern battle conditions and none had any technical experience with aircraft guns, bombs, or bombing devices.

We had some fifty-five training planes in various conditions of usefulness, all entirely without war equipment. Of these planes it is amusing now to recall that the national advisory committee for aeronautics, which had been conducting an alleged scientific study of the problem of flight, advised that fifty-one were obsolete and four others obsolescent.

We could not have put a single squadron in the field, although it was estimated that we should eventually need at least 300 squadrons, each to be composed on the average of some 24 officers, 180 men and 18 planes, besides a large reserve of planes for replacements.

Among other subjects considered with the secretary was the assembly for training of the National Guard and the men to come in under the draft.

In lieu of any previous plans, the secretary contemplated the construction of cantonments in different parts of the country, and May 7 the commanding generals of the several departments were directed to select sites.

The actual construction of cantonments was not begun until nearly three months after we were in the war, and so great was the task of erecting buildings and putting in water works and sewers that some ninety days more elapsed by the time these centers of instruction were ready to receive troops. Thus it was, with some exceptions, practically six months before the training of our army was under way. Even then several of these camps were not favorably located, and training was seriously handicapped during the fall and winter months.

Rivalry for Our Troops.

About this time the allies brought up the question of utilizing our men to build up their armies. As we shall see, the subject arose from time to time in one form or another, and we had to fight against it until the end of the war.

Both the French and British missions, under M. Rene Viviani and Arthur G. Balfour, respectively, then in our country, were very keen to have us consent to fill up the ranks of their armies with Americans.

I was decidedly against our becoming ing a recruiting agency for either the French or British, and at that time this was the attitude of the War department also. While fully realizing the difficulties, it was definitely understood between the secretary of war and me that we should proceed to organize our own units from top to bottom and build a distinctive army of our own as rapidly as possible.

The evident rivalry between the British and French for control and use of our forces, even before we had an army in the field, confirmed my impression that those two governments were not working entirely in harmony. As to their armies, it had been apparent for some time that there was a lack of co-operation between them. Their efforts were often separate and distinct—that is, first one and then the other would attack.

Friends Sought to Go Along.

Although it was not generally known that I was to go abroad, there was a flood of applications to accompany me. One of them was a personal appeal for service in any capacity by my old friend, Robert Bacon, who had been ambassador to France. He had already given valuable aid to the allied cause, and because of his intimate knowledge of the French people and his tact and discretion I was glad to have him.

A few days before my departure, while at lunch at the Metropolitan club with Charles E. Magoon, ex-governor of Cuba, Charles G. Dawes joined us. The three of us had been friends in the days when we were together at Lincoln, Neb. Magoon and Dawes as young lawyers, the latter with a decided talent for business, and I as military instructor at the state university.

Dawes was an applicant for a commission in one of the engineer regiments then being organized under the direction of Samuel Felton, from volunteers with experience in railroad engineering, and wanted me to help him get the appointment. I asked him whether he knew anything about engineering, and he said that when a youth he had carried a chain a month or so for a surveyor in Ohio.

In was not much impressed with his pretensions as an engineer or as a prospective military possibility, but I did have knowledge of his business ability and experience, and knew that he would be valuable in some position requiring his qualifications, so I spoke to the secretary of war in his behalf.

Requests from National Guard officers and from governors for the early acceptance of their state units literally poured into the War department. The clamor became so general and so insistent that the secretary of war happily conceived the idea of forming a composite division to include troops from every state in the Union. I thought the suggestion a good one and gave it my hearty endorsement. This was the origin of the Forty-second (Rainbow) division, which was later to distinguish itself in several engagements.

CHAPTER IV.

My first and my only meeting with President Wilson until after the armistice occurred May 24, 1917, when I called on him with Secretary of War Baker. After some conversation with Mr. Baker on shipping, Mr. Wilson turned to me.

"General, we are giving you some difficult tasks these days," said the President.

"Perhaps so," I replied, "but that is what we are trained to expect, Mr. President."

The President then mentioned my experience in Mexico and inquired about my acquaintance with France. I had expected him to say something about the part our army should play in the war, but he said nothing.

Promised Full Support.

Upon leaving, I said: "Mr. President, I appreciate the honor you have conferred upon me by the assignment you have given me, and I realize the responsibilities it entails, but you can count upon the best that is in me."

To this the President replied: "General, you were chosen entirely upon your record, and I have every confidence that you will succeed; you shall have my full support."

The President then asked me to convey to the king of Great Britain and to the President of France his greetings and best wishes. His manner was cordial with his poise and his air of determination.

His assurance of confidence in me was gratifying, but in the difficult situations that arose later regarding the manner of aiding the allies, he was inclined to yield to the persistent importunities of the allied representatives in Washington.

In the actual conduct of operations I was given entire freedom, and in this respect was to enjoy an experience unique in the history of American wars.

Letter Making Him Chief.

May 27, 1917, the day before I was to sail from New York, Secretary Baker sent me a letter of instructions concerning my command, authorities and duties in Europe, which is quoted in full:

"The President directs me to communicate to you the following:

"1. The President designates you to command all the land forces of the United States operating in continental Europe and in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, including any part of the marine corps which may be detached for service there with the army. From your command are excepted the military attaches and others of the army who may be on duty directly with our several embassies.

"2. You will proceed with your staff to Europe. Upon arrival in Great Britain, France or any other of the countries at war with the imperial German government, you will at once place yourself in communication with the American embassy and through its agency with the authorities of any country to which the forces of the United States may be sent.

"3. You are invested with the authority and duties devolved by the law, regulations, orders and customs of the United States upon the commander of an army in the field in time of war and with the authority and duties in like manner devolved upon department commanders in peace and war, including the special authorities and duties assigned to the commander of the Philippine department, in so far as the same are applicable to the particular circumstances of your command.

U. S. Forces "Separate."

"4. You will establish, after consultation with the French war office, all necessary bases, lines of communication, depots, etc., and make all the incidental arrangements essential to active participation at the front.

"5. In military operations against the imperial German government you are directed to co-operate with forces of the other countries employed against that enemy; but in so doing the underlying idea must be kept in view that the forces of the United States are a separate and distinct component of the combined forces, the identity of which must be preserved. This fundamental rule is subject to such minor exceptions in particular circumstances as your judgment may approve. The decision as to when your command, or any of its parts, is ready for action is confided to you, and you will exercise full discretion in determining the manner of co-operation. But, until the forces of the United States are, in your judgment, sufficiently strong to warrant operations as an independent command, it is understood that you will co-operate as a component of whatever army you may be assigned to by the French government.

"6. You will keep the department fully advised of all that concerns your command and will communicate your recommendations freely and directly to the department. And in general you are vested with all necessary authority to carry on the war vigorously in harmony with the spirit of these instructions and toward a victorious conclusion.

(Signed) NEWTON D. BAKER.

Party Sails in Secrecy.

On the date of my sailing, May 28, 1917, my party assembled at Governor's island, New York. All had been instructed to proceed with the utmost secrecy, even wearing civilian clothes until they were aboard the steamship Baltic.

Although we ourselves stole silently out through the fog and down the bay, the large number of quartermasters and other officers stationed near New York dashing around in uniform rather ostentatiously that day really amounted to an announcement something out of the ordinary was happening.

But it must be said to the credit of the press representatives that they were most discreet, as the papers generally published nothing about us until we were in Europe.

During the voyage most of my time was spent in conference with the heads of staff departments regarding their duties and plans. The study of French was taken up by many officers, and classes were in session at all hours.

In the Danger Zone.

June 6 the Baltic began to zigzag and we realized we were in the danger zone. Next morning an escort of two American destroyers gave us something of a thrill and fully restored confidence. No submarines were observed, however, and the weather was perfect throughout the voyage.

Elevator Making Slow

Headway With Britons

Although the centuries-old great tower of Windsor castle, whose top-most floors are the repository of state documents, is to be equipped with a modern elevator—or lift, as they describe it in England—that convenience of modern life does not appeal to a large number of Britons.

Lord Hanworth, master of the rolls, who is sixty-eight, thinks the government should fix sixty-five as the age limit for using elevators. He never uses the elevator in the law courts because he finds that the exercise of walking up and down the stairs is beneficial to his health.

But Oldfield Thomas, a distinguished scientist who died a few years ago at the age of seventy-four, left in his will $6,000 to install an elevator in the Natural History museum. He had toiled up two long flights of stairs at the museum daily for 46 years.

Frequent appeals were made to the government by the museum authorities to appropriate money for a lift, but none was forthcoming. Mr. Thomas then began to set aside some of his own money for that purpose.

A few days ago this lift was opened to use by the museum staff. It was on this occasion that on behalf of the trustees Lord Hanworth received it and spoke disapprovingly of the use of such contraptions by persons under sixty-five.

Nevertheless, the elevator idea is spreading in Britain. Now and then one still runs across even a new building of four or five stories equipped with lifts, probably because the old buildings replaced had none. In the majority of cases, however, they are features of the new structures, for higher rents can be charged where they exist.—New York Sun.

SWEETEN ACID STOMACH THIS PLEASANT WAY

When there's distress two hours after eating—heartburn, indigestion, gas—suspect excess acid.

The best way to correct this is with an alkali. Physicians prescribe Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

A spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water neutralizes many times its volume in excess acid; and does it at once. To try it is to be through with crude methods forever.

Be sure to get genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. All drugstores have the generous 25c and 50c bottles. Full directions in package.

Lost Articles Restored

to Their Lucky Owners

An unemployed man, finding some pearls in a London street, took them to the police station, and discovered that he was entitled to a reward of £100. The Port of London Authority sent a diver down to recover the gold pencil case which had been dropped by a lady in going down the gangway from a ship. It was restored to her, none the worse, in two days. But the most remarkable of all cases of articles being lost and found was that of the airman who made a landing in the middle of an eastern desert. When he was in the air again he discovered that he had lost a bunch of keys. Some time later flying over the same desert, he again had occasion to make a landing. When he got out of the plane he found his lost keys lying at his feet.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine

Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.
